VISIONS IN STONE

A guide to inspirational historic buildings in the North East
Inspiring sites: Art and heritage in the North East

The magnificent sweeping landscape of the North East is studded with castles, ruins, mansions, and churches great and small. This rich cultural and artistic legacy stretches back to at least the early eighth century C.E. when the Lindisfarne Gospels were written on Holy Island and Saint Bede made the area an important European centre of learning.

For centuries, these sites have been a draw for artists. None were more captivated by the North East’s blend of nature and antiquity than the eighteenth-century painters of the Romantic Age. Many celebrated artists worked in the region – J.M.W. Turner (1775-1851) depicted Prudhoe and Norham Castles dissolved in light, Thomas Girtin (1775-1802) produced atmospheric watercolours of Tynemouth and Lindisfarne priories, Thomas Hearne (1744-1817) painted a picturesque Barnard Castle, and John Varley (1778-1842) produced numerous scenes of Holy Island. Capturing the emotional power of historic buildings ravaged by time and weather, these artists evoked a tradition that lives on through us, having fired our appreciation and care for the irreplaceable monuments of our shared past.

Let the grand monuments of the North East inspire you, too. Experience their power to evoke centuries of history, time and weather for generations of artists. Overleaf is a map of the region with information on six recommended sites. All are easily accessible via Durham or Newcastle, well connected by public transport and some close enough for a combined day trip. Details of train journeys, metro stops and bus routes are designed to give you an idea of how easy it is to travel within the region, even without a car.

Many of these paintings (and more) are housed in North East collections. Why not visit:

Wearmouth-Jarrow
The churches of St Paul in Jarrow and St Peter in Wearmouth are twin monastic sites that together formed one Anglo-Saxon monastery. A mile apart. Home to the influential Venerable Bede – monk, historian, poet and teacher – Wearmouth-Jarrow was a centre of European learning and culture. St Paul’s parish church features a 7th-century chancel, original dedication stone, and window of Anglo-Saxon stained glass. The nearby Bede’s World Museum tells the story of Bede’s life and legacy. At St Peter’s Church, the 7th-century west wall and north porch, which Bede first walked through as a child of seven, are still standing, displaying original carvings. Excavated archaeological remains from the 7th century are also on display, and the small visitor centre runs historic tours.

Hexham Abbey
When Wilfred Bishop of York received a gift of lands at Hexham from Queen Eadhild at the end of the seventh-century, he built a Benedictine abbey here, and used nearby Roman ruins to help construct it. Only the Saxon crypt and apse still remain of Wilfred’s abbey, the majority of what visitors see today is the Augustinian priory (1170-1250) that replaced it. The awe-inspiring architecture houses numerous treasures: an Anglo-Saxon crypt, Roman stones and inscriptions, a Saxon bishop’s throne, Dark Age crosses, a pre-Renaissance pulpitum and the country’s only surviving monastic night stairs in continuous use. Why not also visit the nearby Old Gaol, England’s oldest purpose-built prison?

Prudhoe Castle
Halfway between Newcastle and Hexham by train lies the ruined medieval castle of Prudhoe, ideally located for a combined day-trip with Hexham Abbey. Beautifully situated above the River Tyne and enclosed by a deep moat, it is easy to see why Turner painted a captivating hilltop view of Prudhoe. There are towered walls, the garrison house and Great Hall to explore, as well as surrounding dry moat, woodland and mill pond areas to enjoy. The castle was the home of the Unfoursilues after the Norman conquest, survived two sieges during the 1170s – making it the only Northumbrian castle to resist the Scots – and was later restored by the Percy family before its incarnation as a Georgian manor house in the nineteenth century.

Tynemouth Priory and Castle
Visitors to Newcastle are within easy reach of a visit to Tynemouth Priory and Castle, an imposing set of monastic ruins of what was at one time Northumberland’s largest Benedictine monastery, perched on the headland above the North Sea and the River Tyne. Evoking the talid beauty of Lindisfarne, the rugged remains command spectacular views which have enthralled artists for centuries. The ruins visible today represent several periods in the site’s history, in Anglo-Saxon origins, remnants of a Norman church, the eleventh-century Benedictine priory with Gothic prebendary and conventional buildings, thirteenth-century fortifications and subsequent use as a royal castle after the Reformation, and its later history as an artillery fort.

Tynemouth Priory and Castle, Pier Road, Tynemouth, Tyne and Wear, NE30 4BZ

Finchale Priory
The atmospheric and picturesque ruins of Finchale Priory (pronounced ‘faikle’) on the banks of the River Wear only three miles from Durham are the former home of Saint Godric of Finchale, who settled here in the twelfth-century. The extensive remains of the monastic complex are of the Benedictine priory built in the thirteenth-century on the site of Godric’s original hermitage, and they include the stone chapel of St John the Baptist which once housed the remains of St Godric – look for the simple stone cross that marks his burial. The site’s original layout is substantially intact. Roaming high elevations, subterranean rooms, a double altar basin and stone seat as well as intricate nave arches and heavily decorated capitals on arcade columns, it is worth purchasing a plan of the ruins from the concession (30p) as many of the monastic rooms are not labelled.

Auckland Castle
Recently opened to the public, magnificent Auckland Castle dates back to the twelfth century. Built as a country estate of the Bishops of Durham, in 1832 it became the official episcopal residence. Standing in 800 acres of parkland, its interiors and grounds express the enormous power and influence of its residents. Explore the elegant throne room, Gothic revival Dyer House in the park and the world-renowned collection of paintings by Francisco de Zurbarán depicting Old Testament patriarchs (dating to 1640-5) in the state dining room. Admire the Bishops’ extensive art collection and the twelfth-century hall, now St Peter’s Chapel, the largest private chapel in Europe, and enjoy a walk through the deer park.

Auckland Castle, Bishop Auckland, Co. Durham, DL14 7NR
